It's not a crime, but it's already considered inappropriate.

A judge sentencing someone to death without proper evidence?

That's jail time (length determined by judge) and the person you beat up has the chance to both sue you and beat you with a stick of ground beef.

Throwing a turtle at someone's car while they are driving.

Really depends on the circumstances, but the minimum sentence is 10 lashes from the zeruel strips for each car blown up followed by a week of re-education; this would occur if the offender blew up cars they owned in the middle of nowhere. If the explosions occurred in a public area and/or the cars were owned by other people, the punishment would be far greater.

If found guilty, there shall face the punishment wheel, which consists of equal sections "Death," "30 Year in Prison," "10 Years in Prison," "5 Years in Prison," "50,000 Pearling Fine," and "5 Pearling Fine". Then if they hedge their bets correctly, it may not be too bad.

Not a crime by itself, however, it would require hacking a Mentholite traffic control system which would earn you a death penalty for endangering the public.

Using chemical weapons in the battlefield.

What endangering the public always gets: death penalty.

Being a public nuisance.
