They are governed by an ideology alien to me, New Era Physiocratic Socialism. It is a step backwards from the previous state of decentralised communal and service heavy economy.

As long as they keep it to themselves, the Pan-Asiatic States do not mind.

the various successor powers fighting against each other kind of seem to be at a, well, impasse, though the advantage tends towards our protagonist powers; the western powers seem rather aligned with each other and with an overseas communist power bloc, whereas the southerners are apparently living in a complete nuclear hellhole (though florida is still gone :crab:), mexico appears to be opposed to this power bloc, and just no one likes the remnants of the us (except for the mexicans). this decisively puts the advantage in the hands of the two socialist powers, thanks to their large population base in california and potential overseas industrial base.

i'm fairly certain if it weren't for the fact that the great plains fell to warlordism and that most big powers in america seem to have nuclear deterrents then the west would absolutely steamroll the east- as it is, though, they seem to be content to keep out of the mudpit in the center of the continent and build up for a future unification campaign.

pas' armed forces make experimental use of mechs in an anti-tank role; the primary purpose of these mechs seems to be, based on the capabilities they have, to equip forces with the flexibility of infantry formations and the speed of armored forces to- in a nutshell- out-traverse tanks in urban combat and then just rip into tanks that lack the offensive capabilities needed to engage with said mechs. i can imagine that this would push for the development of strong over-the-horizon engagement capabilities among their enemies, but then again, such capabilities aren't as effective in urban environments and i can also imagine the absolute hell they would wreak in the sort of hyper-urban environments pas' cities are made to be.

It took the leadership of Earth's fragmented nations until the 23rd Century to realize that civilization was a Ponzi Scheme built on limited natural resources...mostly because those same limited resources and the oh so valuable means of generating energy were well spent and war for these materials was almost never-ending. As a result, many international clients began to confide in Cascadia's plan to begin mining operations in space, first by harvesting asteroids. That feat was mankind's first steps into the final frontier.

OOC: Wow! Your factbook design is lit!

AAN: 1. Ayverin has several different special forces teams, but the one that draws my attention the most is the Eagle Commando one. I guess they're like 160th SOAR, but it says they're involved in air-related warfare, which makes me think that they're an air superiority force. But then why would that be a special operations branch? A little confusing, but I'm probably overthinking things here.

2. They've adopted a policy of neutrality unless provoked, which seems like it would be the optimal relationship to have with other nations... but they still spend a metric ton of cash on the military's new toys, which is also understandable.

AN: Rulzeas can't drink properly, they just get really really hungover whenever they consume alcohol. They also range in size from being on the "basic short human" end to the "tallest human ever" end. I would not wish to interact with the latter, if I'm being honest. Even though they're herbivores, I don't trust 'em.

i learned that somac is slacking off by posting in f7 instead of writing an ic post so uh the macronesian defensive strategy is (and while this isn't in the factbook directly, i'm aware of it through interactions with somac and so i'll write it here anyways; besides, this is only here for context) essentially "a gun behind every blade of grass." their position of war with the united states would lead one to suspect that they're pretty well fucked, lacking no air force whatsoever to defend against b o m b; however, thanks to the po being so stronk and able to actually hold off limited engagements with the us for a short period of time, they've been able to attract foreign investors and harden the islands to the point they're now able to homegrow their own aircraft and essentially line the islands with so many weapons, mines, fences, and fortifications that the united states would have to land to engage with them and landing would be suicide.

essentially, somac is a fortress that only survives because it's made itself worth more money to crack than it's worth, and the us is now content to leave the ronnie raygun off its coast and bomb it occasionally whenever it feels it can get past somac's sam emplacements. they've already learned better than to try and crack the egg outright jesus-fuck-jacob please we only have so many hueys-

So, on April 2019, a lot, and boy do I mean a lot, of people came to watch Avengers: Endgame, through various ways too, such as binocs, climbing, hell, probably even shoving people, and when the main turn of events in the movie began, cheering or the likes of which was so loud you could hear people's voices from everywhere.

I learned that AN is a C&C nation taking place currently in Morocco and Portugal, after a Soviet invasion of Europe took Portugal, and the Brotherhood of Nood managed to take Morocco while nobody was looking. I also learned that AU is very good at writing in bulk, because despite being unfinished, their factbooks are already practically more bulked out than mine XD.

The Rulzea species have a social system consisting of many familial units who gather together as a large community to co-operate. These communities typically have a very tight bond with one another, each of them having it's own culture. And, if I saw it correctly the rulzea managed to avoid the pitfalls of tribalism that such a system would present.

If I am reading the void1 factbook correctly, starting with the more humorous thoughts, Apes are not fans of losing, but are in fact fans of tossing tables, and I don't know what bills he's paid to be breaking tables in this economy but it better be a lot.

But anyway from what I understand @Kotera is some form of entity that played a part in Human development. The Ape... Ape revolution? Like in Overwatch? a possibly similar entity to Kotera that implies that Humanity has created intelligent self-aware apes capable of viable revolution? Most likely in my opinion. As for Theta, he be one of those memetic types. Existing in the Abstract unknowable in theory... for now."

I have learned that Comerciante takes place in a solar system long after a third world war that lead to mass destruction across it's entire extent, leading to massive population death all around, which lead to the somewhat corrupt capitalist nature that took over. I also learned that the planet of Ceres has been entirely destroyed.

There's this species called the Rulzea. They're very intelligent leporids which look like rabbits. Their population have dotted the planet Atis which is where they live for well over 500,000 years due to the lack of any natural major water barriers which prevent them from spreading early in history.

Saying 'leporids that look like rabbits' is kinda like saying 'primates that look like monkeys'. It's technically correct, but it feels kinda funny to put it that way to me XD more of an ooc thing but i've learned that diarcesia's primary worldbuilding formula is through collections of notes or bullet-points. this lends itself towards making things convenient to digest, but complicates things somewhat when people look for something to dig into; the content isn't such that there's paragraphs to immerse oneself in, but rather interesting if somewhat disjointed bullet points. diarcesia goes at things from the bottom up rather than the top down- worlds are constructed through individual notes and snippets rather than built out from overarching views of a broad picture, which i find absolutely fascinating to try and go through, tbh. quite interesting.

In 1245, the lords and noblemen established their own kingdom with 4 being the most prominent which are the Sayers, the Myrik, the Kiow and the Kalin. Wars were constantly fought and chaos ensued until in 1267 when a Duke of a minor Duchy named Ibrahim Novaria Nexum rose and defeated the 4 kingdoms and proclaimed the Tsardom of Ayverin.
