The Tohorinese are a human subspecies that were altered by the gods (?) and they have a border with a powerful and decadent empire.

Kamile's mum is supportive of her, knowing full well that being the Kmer is a stressful job, which... yeah, that's really quite sweet. Oh, and her parents live on a space habitat far-removed from the homeworld, which has got to make keeping in touch difficult.

The Ghesite language has a lot of unusual sounds like ĥ (harsh guttural h), ġ (literally a gulping sound), and ʉ (halfway between u and i but with a rounded mouth). I think I remember Kiu saying the language is based on Scythian but I'm not sure about that.

My nation - which is pretty much just a unified Korea with some extra territory - represents my real views, as does pretty much anything I say on the forums. NS

Nah, not Scythian. Some words are vaguely adapted from Mongolian (i.e., the word for "to love") but the rest is just a disgusting agglomeration of sounds that shows I don't know how to conlang properly. Hence why it's so heavily wip.

also that g is probably incorrectly transcribed, thanks for the heads-up

So, Q&K in the past's main divergence point was where the Balhae decided to go out conquering everything, but in this one, it was a more peaceful coexistence which ended up in the renaming of "Korean" to Kualyeo-in, then it was conquered by our favorite funi mongol man, Genghis Khan, buut it was brought back under the banner of the Kualyeo republic, which defended against Silla Koreans with help from Japan of all people, oh, and the Qing Dynasty doesn't exist.

I've inadvertently learned that there's a villain in Command & Conquer named Dr. Thrax, and he's the inventor of Anthrax Beta. With a name like that, I guess his career was inevitable.

As for Anthrax B itself, has a consistency similar to paint, apparently, and can stick to surfaces in the same way. Apparently an opposing faction - GLA? CIA?

- likes to apply it to enemy vehicles as a battle tactic. Anthrax B is highly toxic, virulent enough to make affected organics literally melt. That's some bad poison.

They were a post-Soviet republic, yet they have elected the communist party in 2008, which is quite unusual imo since most post-Soviet nations I know aren't exactly keen on becoming communist again. In addition, fascists seem to be a problem, having conducted an uprising in 2005.

Their nation practises active conscription where all citizens must undergo eight weeks of basic training in either the army or navy starting at 18. Then they can choose to either serve for a year in the branch they chose or go back to civilian life, but they must still eventually serve the year in the military between the ages of 18 and 30. And if they choose to return to civilian life after their mandatory service, they will be considered a reservist until the age of 40.

Aikolanders are generally Euroskeptic. Of the four major parties only the Social Democrats support joining the EU, and even though they control the government now, they don't want to join it because the last time they asked, 73% of the people had no wish to do that.

The Europeans were some of the bravest and stupidest people to ever exist, as they quite literally spent billions on building a bunch of massive colony ships for the sole purpose of flinging them through a gaping hole in space that they didn't even know the nature of at the time of constructing the ships. Seriously, they didn't even launch probes going off the overview, they just sent the colony ships and decided "Hey, let's toss these big boys through it while we're at it! That sounds like a good idea!" once they determined it was a wormhole.

They kind of deserved to lose 75% of their investment, all things considered.

The large and diversified economy is mostly focused on the export of luxury and pleasure goods, including pretty much everything your average college student consumes, from microwave safe food products to cheap alcohol. Essentially, the sort of stuff that can't be easily massed produced in primitive economies where resources aren't as varied.

This actually makes a lot of sense, I mean when you think about it, even things like books took thousands of years and a great deal of effort to become as widespread as they are today, so it would make sense that post-apocalyptic economies would struggle to produce their own.

Convallaria: ~~*crab* Los Angeles is gone *crab*~~

In an interesting little twist, rather than being actively and openly authoritarian and hostile towards their own citizens in the name of 'ideological unity' (I can't think of the right words for it), they guarantee the rights of their citizens freedoms of speech, religion, and even guarantee the right to an education - which while I am unsure of the full extent might include anything from 'The Government can't say someone can't get an education' to 'College is Free' - though the section on the military makes that a bit screwy. However, they are de facto allowed to subvert Declaration A through Part XIV of the constitution: Which allows the National Industrial (The national legislation) to make laws in the name of national security ala a bastardized mixture of the Patriot Act and whatever McCarthy would probably try to pass. This effectively means that groups such as Communists can be quickly subverted.

I just gotta love how sneakily subversive this is. It isn't in your face like "ha ha, you have no rights. fuck youuuuuu" like a lot of nations would do. Rather, it's something most wouldn't even notice unless they've actually read the constitution which, given it's Chapter 14 of a multi-chapter constitution. Which, given how most OTL Americans barely know their amendments past the 10th, I highly doubt. So, I like it.

Ninja'd

AN: Despite being a minarchist community, it is divided up into several political factions that (at least as I read it) violently and heavily dash with each other. These range from the almost far-right Neo Justice Movement to the Prime Alliance Party which wants to disarm the communes - most likely leading to a centralized state. To say this nation sounds violent and unstable is understating it, though it is no surprise that these factions clash given how rapidly different their goals are.

Much of the old world Deep South is under control of the so-called Holy Columbian Confederacy. With a population near 10 million and a swathe of territory larger than its neighbors, the Confederacy is as close to a Great Power as you can be, and their neighbors are as scared of them as they are of Brazil.

I'd like to know about that one too.

Alis suffers from amnesia, which.... understandable, the human brain was made for processing abstractions and stuff our squishy grey brain-meat can actually comprehend, and running a supercarrier's worth of precise raw data through there probably isn't the best idea. I suspect she's got a rather large computational centre hidden away somewhere in the ship's hull just so she can process it all in a way the human brain understands without having a seizure.
