They have caves that appear to 'sing,' when wind travels into them. This has earned them the name, the mourning caves. Most of the caves are covered in rocks, and the only safe way to get close is through the usage of a 'hover boat.'

They use a Han character for their currency, and after googling it, I learned it means "substitute" or "exchange". Also, they have a Civ5 unique unit and building which makes me question how a communist state forms in literally thousands of years before communism is invented but hey a lot of stuff in Civ doesn't make sense so I won't ask anymore.

Dragons are essentially giant and deadly geese who have a built-in organic flamethrower; just like geese, they're none too friendly and they come into friction with civilization when they migrate southward to mate.
