Russians shoot man and his doctor. Both die.

The crash teleports Man to a thankfully habitable planet. It is in a close binary with a partner star that keeps its magnetic field active, but they are both orbiting the most massive star in their galaxy very far out, which is somehow able to prevent another star from stealing them due to being ejected from its cluster earlier. Seems that this just happened at the wrong time, since in a few million years the primary will be either a black hole or nothing, while the partner would be unchanged.

Planet:
Distance from partner: 1.35 Ro

Age:  $9.14 \times 10^{10}$  years,  $1.41 \times 10^{13}$  years until death.

Man slows down the lesser star system he's located in using his pure psychic power, which causes the system to crash on the massive star and evaporate the body of the Man. But Man manages to keep his consciousness active somehow.
