I mean apart from incidents of spam, which are generally dealt with quickly, images have contributed a lot to the forum, especially for post aesthetics on RP boards. Oh and GE&T would not be the same without them

OK so gravedigging threads.

I can get someone finding a long-dead thread and, being unaware of the rules in regards to gravedigging, replying to the thread with something relevant to the topic. Usually those will just be locked, maybe with a mod post saying for the person who bumped the thread (or anyone really) can just make a new thread if they really want to discuss this topic.

But what I'll never get are the people who find long-dead threads and then bump them up with some borderline spammy nonsense like 'Wow this thread is old!!!!', 'What a cool thread', etc. That's just dumb and it's no wonder they're the type of gravediggers who tend to get official or unofficial warnings.

I'm not sure if half of the people participating in the "What does AN import" thread differentiate imports from exports.

The fact that the abundance of Americans on this site resulting in a lot more nations using the customary/imperial system than in real life.

Bonus points if they're a future tech nation that still uses feet and inches because the person behind the account doesn't know metric.

It's the same as when some pornspammer would come in and everyone and there mother would come in to report it while also bemoaning how corrupted their pure virgin eyes have become by seeing a penis.
