That depends. If you're a government official, the sentence is death no matter what, but if you're not there are a couple ways it could go.

You're definitely getting charged with cannibalism (sub-offense under disregard for the sanctity of human life), which carries a 10 year sentence, but if the home intruder was armed or can be proven to have intended to maim or kill the inhabitant(s) of the home you'll probably avoid a murder charge. If those circumstances don't apply, however, life in prison.

Murder is murder - 20 years imprisonment. Police are not above the law and the law cares not for whether someone "deserved" to die.

The Knights of Mare Nostrum are an order formed in 1189 centered around islands in the Mediterranean after the Knights Hospitaller and Templar merged, along with the integration of other knightly orders through history, and now serve a role as a militarized wing of the Papacy which utilises what is essentially hyper-militaristic canon law.

Vigilantism... that's illegal assumption of office and usurping the power of the Peoples Armed Police. Also it depends on the kind of harm he's done to the alleged criminals...and gaining super powers without informing the proper offices as to the method, thereby withholding it from the state could be construed as treason. A lengthy stay in a government laboratory, followed by corrective labour is pretty much a given. What work camp boss could not use a man with super strength, I'm sure we'll find a place of gainful employment for the bugger.

Not necessarily a crime as long as complicated set of criteria are met. Costumed vigilantes have been around the Commonwealth for years. The Lone Stranger from the Pioneer Days, was the first among many. Most work within the framework of the law as private detectives (and none have any verified "superpowers"). However there are the strange few who as a signature dress oddly (The Verdant Vespoidean), those who take great pains to avoid the limelight (a typical agent of the Wayne Detective Agency), or disappear back into the shadows (The Mysterious Shadow Stranger) after foiling a criminal operation (while leaving enough evidence for criminals to indict themselves).

There is always the danger that the vigilante would be lawfully declared a public nuisance. The charge can vary from a verbal warning to up to 1 year in prison per offence, but nevertheless remanded to an asylum until ascertained that he is no longer a danger to himself and others. The battered criminal can sue the vigilante in civil court for damages if things go south for the vigilante.

Pakestani law does not label attempted suicidal as criminal. The individual would face no punishment but would be required to attend a temple or meet with a secular aid group.

Advertising loopholes in tax codes to the general public in the interest of helping people save money that would unnecessarily go to state coffers.

Depends... standing in the middle of the road would get you a fine and probably a few good ones with the policemen's nightstick. Doing the same on a rail-line would (provided the next train wouldn't dissolve the problem into red chunks) earn you a hefty punishment for sabotage and trespassing.

Arrest for trespassing, 3rd degree interrogation, followed disposal to a camp at the arse-end of nowhere. Should the interrogation show results of malfeasance - shoopty shooty. Also inquiry into security measures, the consequences for the guards and their commanders would certainly be dire.
