yeah sorry for that i just happen to hold no respect for a community that tolerated a bunch of literal russian neo-nazis long enough that they ended up literally doxxing a dev and forcing her to completely remove as much of her internet presence as possible, literally trying to drive her to kill herself, over what amounted to wanting to speed up the dev cycle on her part.

haha oof, i'm so glad i'm not part of any fandoms, they suck categorically. sorry, i know i should take this more seriously, all i can say is that i am in no way surprised that this is how in-group thinking always ends up without fail. especially around stuff that lets you play as germans or russians.

she was trans and they specifically went after that. which... that's the definition of being literal human filth, since yknow it's not like there can be any good reason to not abuse someone over a completely uncontrollable issue and bring all that horrible shit back to the surface for them, especially after they've just gotten out of a really vulnerable place in their life. can't foresee that going wrong or anything, no-sirree. not like 44% rate of self-harm doesn't imply that might be a bad idea or anything. and the end result was the rightfully disgusted people left the community, leaving the cunts behind to stew in their own shit some more along with the blissfully unaware fourteen year olds who unironically post "blessed X_LEADER moment" on their superevent music.

this isn't to say that good people don't still like the mod and its storytelling but the fandom is definitely dragging the whole thing down m and it's a bit of a shame.

I sure am glad I was a teenager in a time when the worst of "gamer culture" was 9 year olds screaming racial slurs in Modern Warfare 2 lobbies. It's still bad they were doing that, but what happens these days in gaming communities makes that seem like nothing.

now all those people are adults who still spend all their time screaming racial slurs in mw2 lobbies. except now they can vote and their parents no longer care enough to shut them up when they're in public.

i mean... i get what you're saying but highlighted is kinda what they were trying to get to happen. also, that number is the aggregate for non-, pre-, and post-transition, so it's either higher or lower depending. but besides that i'm not at all shocked, just disappointed, although even that's not all that strong of a feeling since i only knew about these people for like 20 minutes beforehand.

yeah, definitely indefensible, and people honestly take dumb video games way too seriously. this really isn't even the first time something like this has happened, and won't be the last by a long shot, but assuming we do something about resource shortages transphobia is at least starting to die out. won't do anything about people taking fictional media made by hobbyists far too seriously for anyone's good, but honestly, that's a bigger issue than anything i'm qualified to tackle even if i pretend i know what i'm doing, point is that western culture really doesn't prioritize mental health in any fashion, so people don't even bother trying to seek out little things they can do to help calm down their anger issues. it's just most visible in video games because most people online like video games.

i think that the most puzzling definition of anarchism i've heard was when someone tried to say anarchy was when the government is small, and that "anarchists don't want no government".

Google Murray Bookchin. Murray Bookchin is one of the best anarchists to read on. Emma Goldman is another great one. Those are some suggestions from me to start on.
