"What is this runt? Trying and succeeding at undermining the Markets with a failed ideology? This can't be. This just cannot be! Nor shall this stand, I won't allow it. No...But that depends if his pathetic country has any resources that are worth a damn to sell for a profit. Because, well, toppling a government costs money, and I need cash to pay for myself and the lackeys I use to see his face smashed by a Capitalist pigdog face! I wish it wasn't so. For the lackeys that is, but that's just how things are, you know? Some people are so selfish to think they need to feed themselves. Hmph! Greedy little peasants.

Anyways, he's done a fine job at pretending to vaporize corruption so that an alternative form of corruption that is more under the radar can take place because that's just how the world works. No good intentions will bear any fruit besides the gates of hell. But it's cute to see that he thinks can achieve the impossible. I can't wait to see when he facing reality. A big eye-opener, it will be for the lucky idealist. Overall, I dislike him for the reason that I currently have no intel on his natural resources."

I gotta admit, I love these extremely efficient assholes, cause they make awesome high risk and high reward raiding targets. Got lots of guards, but if ya' get through them, the loot is oh so sweet! And the people they crossed are more likely to join us or help us to spread and gain more power. Slick though is a dude beyond our reach so far, cuase ya' know, a house cat is a predator, but he can't kill and eat a bull. "Well I have to admit when I got here I didn't expect to see someone like Shawn. So, an accidental rise to power, huh? Well I didn't image becoming a leader of an entire country either a year ago as well so I suppose I kinda know how it feels. You got drunk and high off your mind, decided to do a little dance during that and the next thing you know you became the leader of the Sky Reavers? That's... Never thought I'd read something like this but hey here we are. Personally, I wouldn't touch alcohol or weed myself, other than for obvious reasons I'd rather not have that stuff affecting my brain. But hey I'm not your mom so you can do whatever, I don't care.

Also, as someone fighting against two old world orders and a mind controlling tyrant, I can certainly commend your detication to freedom. Bit of a shame you don't mention anything about the word of Mao or Deng but atleast you aren't a capitalist pig. Overal, I don't see anything I could particularly dislike about Shawn at the current moment."

RESPONSE FROM THE INSTITUTE

"Let's see what cookie cutter president, antiquated tyrant or unconvincing prophet who I must waste my time giving clever insights on. Wait... Isn't this the one who beat me half to death before? And which has called me a "deranged brainwasher"? That's funny. I could accuse her of some not so pretty things, too, like being dragging her subordinates into a mad enterprise, consuming their souls to fuel her megalomaniac project of alone defeating Yuri. Or of having descended so far into paranoia and might makes right that she no longer is any different from the brainwashed. Isn't her brain stone set into one unattainable goal? What is that the result off if not from the careful, methodical, brainwashing that has been done to her since birth? By her parents, by the Chinese state and it's academical lackeys, and by life itself. In trying to prevent exterior brainwashing she has only exacerbated her self made one.

But we are also very much alike, nonetheless her disgust of my person. See it like this, first we both know that states do not have the people's best interests in mind. Why did you escape with the researchers of Kashmir, against the orders of the PRC? Because you knew they would gladly sacrifice most of your lives if it meant they could keep at least one of the blueprints. We both are devoted to our communities. And we both figured we needed an iron fist inside the velvet gloves. You worked tirelessly, in those first months in Alaska. That's commendable. We both think, nay, we know we are the most critical points of the entire structure, Institute of paramilitary, whose existence is threatened by our mortality. And we both fear this mortality, we only have different coping mechanisms.

I use biological engineering and mechanical implants to lengthen my lifespan. You surround yourself with a ring of steel and distrust that protects you from would be assassin's. See, I told you. We are not so different after all. Farewell, Ms Yunru, I hope someday we can meet without you beating me to a pulp.

The Knight-General of Hyrule, Alcalph

"Yet again, the oddities of this strange world come forward to attempt to distract me from the very important duties I have for Hyrule, to perhaps try to bring me mercy with a small break from it all, which is a... Rather shortsighted reason indeed.
(sighs quietly) I would be lying, however if these sudden dossiers of random people which seem to exist in many a universe did not ever interest me. Quite the opposite, in fact, as proved by the very interesting figure I have seen before me, sir Raleigh O'Connor. This is indeed someone I wish to comment on, for he is a man worth of laud, and an honourable character of which I could very much respect, from the at-all-costs mindset for the protection of his realm, the creativity of which he uses all the tools at his disposal to get to said goal. And more.

Nevertheless, let us get to specifics... I cannot say this myself, as a matter of fact there are many in this realm of which we call home which could never claim to have a childhood squandered by O'Connor. Most of us were very much so adults when the Twilight Crisis struck us, when the facts of reality finally reared it's ugly head to prove to Hyrule of it's ineptitude in protecting itself, whereas for the 'Chairman', he had seen violence and the ugliness of reality at most certainly a younger age than I. It seems it both had the same impact, neither of us, after seeing something which attempted to break our realms, we would not see it happen again, and at any costs. And the way you go about this is commendable, indeed... I have never heard of this 'Brainwashing' or 'Brainscrubbing' ideas before, but changing people to the good man's whims is an interesting concept, and effective as well most likely. I do find myself confused at how you went around recovery, creating 'Humans' which just rather act as strange, dedicated workers with no other cause and mind but to the job, and the 'Hive' as you call it... They don't sound human to me, it more so seems like they are... Automated mechanisms instead, why would you not just call them that?

And these all worked, yes indeed... I can only hope that the same can be said for my efforts in the future, but as it seems your realm is a lot more... Advanced than Hyrule. Creation of new 'humans', reinventing your mind with 'science' and whatever, is truly beyond us. By any means, enough discussion about the conventions of naming or the sciences, let me conclude, as I still have much to do... Raleigh, I salute you... Your drive to improve your realm at whatever cost, and then your successes in doing so is truly worth of praise. I hope that we may meet someday, but considering you seem to come from a truly different world... It would never happen."

Henry's Mood: Professional

"Sir Alcalph...Knight-General of Hyrule, such an illustrious title, yet seldom heard among the public; if you ask me, that fact alone couldn't be representative of a more capable leader. I think we're all guilty of sentimentalizing fame, but it often requires a significant amount of effort to promote anonymity at such a level. So you know what? I say bravo. The Knight-General is, best put, a pragmatic patriot with his eyeball on the highball so to speak. He's ambitious, but he recognizes the merit of restraint, and he isn't inclined to some ceremonial flight of fancy, so I really don't see the harm in his overzealous thought. His motives are reasonable and healthy as far as I'm concerned, and the Hyrulean armies are fortunate to have him among their ranks. His actions during the Twilight crisis certainly leave little doubt as to his competence as a warrior and commander, even if he is reluctant to admit what actually happened during the mission across the Gerudo."

"I think it's wise of Alcalph to use the relative obscurity of his role to further his agenda. It's a hell of a lot easier to keep your finger on the pulse of someone else when they're not trying to stick their foot down your throat, I suppose. He's charismatic enough to recruit when he deems it necessary, and he's forgettable enough that he can blend in with relative ease when it suits him. He's playing the long game, and with any luck, Alcalph won't suffer any resistance ascending through the ranks. Nevertheless, Hyrule is at a crossroads, and people are seeking change, real change. So with that being said, Alcalph will have to remain cognizant as political polarity widens during his ongoing attempt at power. As an impartial essayer of good faith, morality and national pride, I think Alcalph is exactly what Hyrule needs, and if he plays his cards right, his people will most definitely recognize that too."

But enough about me. Let's go onto you, Mr. Hammerstein: There is something inspirational about those stories of 'self-made men', the Carnegies of the world, that seem more like exceptions to the rule, even in the American Dream my counterparts really like to howl on about. I mean, the underdog winning and all, powerful stuff, examples of great dedication and motivation, meant to get us all to reach for the stars.

But still, capitalists are a fascinating breed; no doubt, creature comforts and desires breed creativity and opportunities to make outlets for more desires. It feels good. At the same time, I'm puzzled, if this really is the 'natural' way things go on planets where offer and demand are law, with scarcity, in an environment that doesn't threaten to kill you every second of existence, when charity and goodwill become musts and not recommended acts. My people have sacrificed a lot of things in space, but we've also destroyed many supposed needs of your system. I suppose you're an exemplary individual...in your people's system. "

Our kind have little truck with the idea of hereditary leadership, as we hold that the one who should lead should be the one that most effectively proves themselves equal to the task. That said, for what little it might be of worth to her, I cannot help but feel sorry. She is trapped in a cage from which there is little chance of freedom, lest she find outside supporters for her cause, and I see little chance of that happening. "I of course greatly approve of much of Comrade Estima's work in aiding the people of Sherechia in moving towards socialism. His infrastructural projects and commitment to proletarian democracy are both quite admirable. I'll admit that I am not particularly enthusiastic with regards to his maintenance of a market system, given that such a mechanism contains the germ of capitalism and prevents further movement towards socialism, but there is still plenty of time to eventually transition towards a non-market model, such as participatory planning. I suppose that would form the core of my recommendation to Comrade Estima, not to fall into the trap that so many revolutionary regimes have and allow things to backslide back into the old system. Contradictions still remain, and must be resolved to advance forwards. The revolution is continuous."
