I agree pretty much entirely with that post. One thing though is that I think it will eventually lead to the death of the "effortposter", which is interesting for me personally since I straddle the line. Either way I think the proportion of low-effort F7 threads will just keep rising in the future.

It depends on what exactly the situation is. I think that because of COVID, a lot more people have just had more time on their hands, especially children, who may have to stay home with very little to do in lessons, leading to them coming and infesting the boards of F7 and creating more and more horrendous low effort threads. While COVID has also let more effortposters come in and do things (I don't think I would've had time to make most of the things I've made on this account without the influence of the 'varus'), it did ultimately open the floodgates for a lot more low effort posters.

Ultimately I believe that they'll eventually get back into things once COVID dies down and then NS may return to more effortposting or just generally be quieter. Those low efforters who remain will hopefully have assimilated enough of other people's writings to actually become effortposters themselves.

Ended up coming here back when COVID was at it's worst, and I can agree with you. I was (and still am) quite the low-effort poster back when I posted on my main. Maximum I'd write back then (and again, same today) was about two to three sentences. Hopefully when the coof dies down enough as to where it isn't that big of a threat as it was at the time, I and the other low-efforters end up leaving.

Well, that's a new one. I've never seen anyone intentionally want to be torn away from NS so... congrats?

Anyway, my personal take on the whole summerposter thing is that you're basically damned if you do and damned if you don't. If, like some notable NSers, you just shit on the low-effort plebs, they'll either double down or leave.

Hypothetically the latter is a good thing, but I'd feel like a humongous dick for doing that. If you try to offer advice and constructive criticism, there's a fifty-fifty chance they'll tell you to fuck off and keep doing their thing or actually take it to heart and take it upon themselves to improve. A corollary to that is that you run the risk of doing the former to players who are actively in the process of doing the latter and alienating potentially committed, creative players who just need some time to get their ideas down.

I freaking love this website. I love the community (yes, Rein, even NSG), I love the creativity I see when I log in every morning, I've made friends with some truly great players on here and I never want to let this site go. But if we keep going down the path we're on of internecine clique warfare, being needlessly assholeish to noobs, and staying in our own little bubbles here we're going to kill the community. It's not going to happen today, or this week, or this month, or this year, but it's going to happen and it's going to be too late when we notice. In conclusion, I want to challenge every self-proclaimed effortposter reading this to get out of their F7 comfort zone. Do more with your characters, do more with your writing skills. NationStates, PT2M, even II or NS Sports. The community needs you, and if you want to make the community better why not put your money where your mouth is?
