If no harm happens, usually will be left to local officials to decide. If someone is harmed; anything from ban from receiving license or death.

Technically that would count as trespassing, and would be punishable by only about 5 years. Of course, this isn't taking into account how exactly they got in the bank vault, and depending on the method used could lead to other charges such as breaking and entering, destruction of property, or intent to steal, any of which could lengthen the sentence significantly.

Most likely the child is taken away and placed in a foster home, with the parents tried for child neglect. Of course, times are changing and this punishment will probably change too.
