As jolly and awesome as the rest of Valentinians, she might be "little" sister of Clarissa, but still, her AI is better than our sapient AI John Walker, who is a member of our council. Perhaps we will approach this tech one day, but not now... for now, we gonna throw even more money and luxuries at scientists, so they can develop better AI. Maybe we will meet Valentinians eye to eye one day, and John Walker would have a good talk with her. My opinion is all positive on her, may she be as cheerful as ever!" -Shawn Bjornson

She worships clouds and delights in violence for violence's sake, and she is only the spare to her father's throne. Even when she was an infant, the Council knew she was not up to the task. The Berghi had better conquer her hordes already. They may be pagans as well, but at least they've moved beyond the primitive stage of nomadism and have become makers of architecture and politics."

"It's no surprise the Company man sees himself in the Lord-Berghi, for I see myself in Caller Ari. She has proven her merits and risen to power despite the doubts of men, and she sees the need to preserve her people against the hostilities of their 'civilized' neighbor. Ari sees through the Berghi's hypocrisy and the way they willingly mold their beliefs to fit their greed. She may not believe she has Oloughin's charisma, but she has insight to see past the veneer of her political foes.

Former King Hirotsuga

"I am more superstitious than you, perhaps a more spiritual man. If you look upon my cloak instead of my state, I would ask if you were a spirit or god of some kind. From what I can tell by this report, however, you are neither and seem to behave remarkably as if you were simply another person, despite your origins from another realm and your supernatural abilities. I might feel a 'little cold' sometimes as well, if I were always colder than anything else on the planet!

"While it is pleasant to see you have become friendly with peoples of other nations, I think your paranoia is well-founded. Man is greedy, and greed is powerful. A stranger is as likely to trick you as anything, and you would do well to remain cautious. Especially when your uniqueness—your control over your dimension, your ability to shapechange, your power over temperatures—would make you a target for those who want to see you as a resource instead of a person."

"Apparently, things went full circle in his timeline. Rome went from an elective monarchy to a republic to an empire with republican trappings to a blatantly monarchical empire, and finally it's now an elective monarchy again.

Well, that made the whole revolution of 509 and the Roman Republic null and void. Might as well as have done nothing. Then again, I guess parts of the Roman Republic's history did have a surprising amount of political power in the hands of the commoner.

That's not the point. Essentially, this guy is a puppet of the Eastern Romans. Ruling over a relic in an age where Constantinople, not Rome, dominates the Western world. It is an interesting alternative history. Though, how did the Persians get through Anatolia to reach Constantinople? I mean, it is highly mountainous terrain that took the Muslims a thousand years to conquer.

As much as I wish to go full Rienzi on Rome, I think the best hope for republicanism in Italy lies within the northern cities, assuming they develop into city-states much like in my timeline.'

They also see my love of nature as remarkable, though they seem to have a neutral view on it themselves. Hopefully they at least care enough to keep their own within acceptable levels in their own nation. My curiosities of the high inspector are still there, but again, i would never ask to see them. I would rather build a level of trust to the point where they would offer to show me instead. My views on their policies are still mixed, but again, what matters to me the most is developing relations with other leaders to achieve mutually beneficial agreements. With the High Inspector, i can see these coming much sooner. Overall, my views are positive."

Nemo's Status: It doesn't look like she trusts the Tsar to do anything right for his country.

"I see he is a survivor of an attempted murder by his opponents. Admirable I suppose. But the information on this so-called 'Tsar' is limited and this stands true with the material I have been given. I will withhold from enunciating my prognosis on this Tsar; I should learn not to judge too quickly..."

This is not funny and it is dark

General is this huge, uneducated, primitive shithole where everybody's an expert, and everybody has to share an opinion; and it's usually the result of people eating rotten alphabet soup, because people are just shitting out words that don't make sense. And don't get me started on Fo-

QUOTE

"It is a shame that there is very little to go by the Tsar. His policies and ideals are all but a mystery, with the only indication of his type of rule being that of despotism. Still, the fact that he was forcefully removed by means of being shot up (and thankfully survived by means of gemstones on his garments acting as body armour) is saddening to say the least. his desire to retake his place as ruler is commendable, however i hope that the Tsar's intentions are of good nature and benefit both the nation and its people. I guess I will find out if he is successful. in the mean time, my opinions are neutral."

Leader - Nemo

"I have already touched on Nemo recently and there is really not much else i can say of her until i find out what her viewpoints are on me. until then, I would love to know a lot more about Nemo, but even the overall information is limited at best, and i can only gauge her from the opinions that she gives on others here, and suffice to say, she is a respectable leader, and like me, she holds her views until she knows more about the others. my overall opinions are neutral, but confident that will change to positive in the long run"

the fact that sera is a terrestrial being, it still has some care of the environment even to make a nation environment friendly space is quite interesting to see

I remembered you talking about you and me having a friendly spar, and I still have not forgotten that invite. Maybe this weekend, if you would like. Just go nuts on me, I can patch myself up and will be fine at the end of the day, trust me! You can definitely waiver the responsibilities and possibility of "Oh crap, I accidentally killed a Valentian while we are fighting." Anyway, I am positive on you as always. Your ability to learn things instantaneously is certainly a fascination to me, as well as yourself absorbing a black hole, or a neutron star, two of the most difficult to tame giants of the universe, so easily controlled by the likes of you. Fascinating matter all the more. I hope to meet each other again some day.

It is not as if the Valentians are classified information - we are as clear as the Great Wall of China - who we are, why we are here, and the like. Hmm, pity on such an ignorant front, it's even more terrifying when they are the leaders of their nation.

Ah, another of the Valentians' leaders, this time the President of the Victorian Netherlands.

You know, I've always use to wonder what happened to Europe in my home universe. As it turns out, they were hit a lot less by the Great War than the US or China, but eventually their societies collapsed due to butts of radiation.

Anyway, back to the original topic, it's certainly very interesting what Marcus has accomplished. Spending so much time on science experiments might have seemed like a waste of money to the people he leads, but I'm glad he was able to create so much practical utility by doing so. Of course, in his dossier, there is a lot of talk of the people's opinions of Marcus. I will say this: what the people think of one's rule doesn't matter when one rules over them as an autocrat, and has the force to back up one's rule.

Marcus is, ultimately, a man of the people, perhaps too much so. My opinion of him, and the Valentians in general, remains positive.
