filling someone's house with poisonous frogs

It will be seen as proof you intended to kill them (unless you have some sort of EXTREME condition), you get at least 15 years to life for attempted murder or, if they die, the family can demand the death penalty and compensation.

If they don't demand the death penalty you still owe them compensation and you have a life sentence with least 16 years spent actually in prison.

The average sentence for murder by poisoning (where the family don't demand death) is 25 years to life and the payment of $4,50,000.

The stuffed bear will likely be irrelevant, unless it's connected to the person's mental state. Otherwise, it entirely depends on circumstances (sort of). Even if that wild animal wasn't unleashed to cause damage or kill anyone, the combination of different charges (related to any deaths, injuries, mental impact on the victims of the animal, property damage, etc) that person would end up with either a number of life sentences, or would be sentenced to so many years in prison they would have a de-facto life sentence. Further, their assets, depending on circumstance, may be sized to pay for compensation.

If the person was deemed not mentally fit for trial, they would be held in a psychiatric hospital as they are clearly a danger to society.

Manslaughter (in this case specifically, manslaughter where the person died, but the death wasn't intentional and wasn't negligent).

Not a crime. If it's a genuine accident, then it's tragic but no point sending an otherwise innocent person to jail because of it.

Not a crime. While a policy like that would never realistically get passed in Atrovania (the No Prison policy is not canon in Atrovania), it isn't a crime in Atrovania to express the view that you believe prisons shouldn't exist.

it depends on the case, it can range from 10 to 40 years. but to be more specific, if you killed purposefully a politician while he is doing his job lawfully (regardless of political agenda), you will get 40 years in jail, but you may get released slightly earlier is rehabilitation works and it has been the offenders first crime

Depends. If its cigarettes/cannabis/alcool you are probably fined a lot. If its other drugs you are likely sentenced to prison (2-10 years depending on the circumstances). If you direct a drug cartel you can possibly be sentenced to life in prison.

If it started during a date, this is known as "date grape" and it has a punishment of having to kiss the victim, rub their feet for an hour, and pay for the next 7 dates.

If it started in some other fashion, then the stranger grapist registers as a grapist and has to pay a fine or a bribe.
