Internet forums are serious business. I remember being 14 years old on forums in 2008 dealing with pornspammers and DDOS attack from salty banned users.

Eight anime characters on a flag? You're really deep into this cliché. Cringe and unbiased, just like anime.

I think I watched a few episodes (well, actually quite a few considering iirc they're rather short episodes); really I just like the art style, though.

I did that for LP's PM but they were essentially a cool version of Hoover.

I also had a rough draft in which Nu-Montse did that but the goal was to cover up their own tracks. There's actually several murder methods I can't use in the 60s without drawing suspicion.

Because of this I actually learned that Thallium poisoning was an IRL cliché and continues to be so in crime novels.

NS'ers who copypaste the entire US Armed Forces rank system or the Soviet one when making their armies without considering culture or tradition (it's a

My flag has a dragon on it, seems like dragons are extremely common symbols used on here. And well, I guess everywhere to be fair.

I'd be willing to bet my nation is a bit of a walking cliché to be honest, but hey, that's just how it be sometimes. lol

At least I'm a variation of the "additional items on flag" trope. Besides, who else can claim to have Dean Martin doing a drive-by with a M3 Grease Gun from the bed of a Chevy SSR? C'mon, tell me someone else that has that.

Edit: hold on, the gun's actually an MP40... Still, I have the ELO spaceship.
