As a shameless self-plug not for my lore/factbooks, but for everyone involved, I figured that this would be something you guys might like. ♥

So far, there's only one thread I have archived. If there are threads on the verge of death, you are free to let me know, regardless of if they have reached 500 pages. All it matters to me is to be preserved.

Eh, speaking more seriously, cartoonists have been sexualizing stuff or designing risqué characters since the profession was around. It's not really anything new. The Hays Code from the 1930s more or less axed Betty Boop. MGM had to self-censor Hot Red Riding Hood under pressure as well. And this doesn't even cover unofficial obscene...uh "fanart"...like Tijuana bibles.

If anything, some cartoons that were originally intended for older audiences (like Warner Bros. shorts, though probably more out of violence, I guess) got relegated as kiddie stuff for younger generations once TV time slots developed the Saturday morning cartoon hours some time around the 1970s, at least in America's case. That was arguably the historical moment when cartoons more or less got stuck being associated with children (in the USA) and an industry around it really began churning out a lot of kid-friendly content. This was exacerbated further more in the 80s with FCC edutainment guidelines and franchises built on toy advertisements.

South Reinkalistan is a massive, ecologically-diverse nation notable for its roving student militias and widespread hatred for the elderly. In the midst of a room-temperature cultural revolution that's lost its momentum, the Party carefully plans its next move. You know what? I have been watching Betty Boop and I might put her on my flag because #aesthetics... and half of my characters are 1930s people anyway.

But only after I am bored of this OTP picture. :3 <3
