It's perfectly... Depressing.

I don't really consider that song of theirs depressing. I'd consider Bronte to be more depressing, but it's my favorite song of theirs. Mostly because my mom found it during a perfectly sad period of our life.

“ Azrael wrote:

Yeah, I listened to it when you posted it. No matter how many times "Drunken Sailor" is redone, it will always, ALWAYS, remind me of SpongeBob. So yeah.

I don't even really care for the original.... It's the type of happy music that bores me and gets on my nerves for some reason. I don't even know why. But this dark version with twisted lyrics? I love it. And the fact it's sang by like a choir of kids might make it even creepier, though there's clearly a main singer in it. I always love a good song that's sang well by kids, which is a rare occasion really. Like this.

I'd post the full version of the Drunken Whaler song, but it's not on YouTube yet.

I used to watch Spongebob....then I took an ar-, I mean, I grew up.

The Secret World of Arrietty-The Neglected Garden.

So I come from dark music to a very peaceful song....which sounds like it could be sang by a kid, but I'm fairly sure it's not.

Yeah, they seem to really revolve around that style.

I really like what I've heard from them, but I'm not a close follower of their music.

I don't really follow updates and all that good stuff, but I listen to 'em a lot. I like I See Everything, The Last Lost Continent and St. Paul Church Baptist Blues(I think). I also like...I believe the tribute to Annabel Lee is Three.

I've never really been a fan of spoken word songs where it sounds like the guys just talking. I don't really know why. It just never really interested me. I think sometimes it's because for me it just sounds like they sing crappy and sound like they are talking instead of singing (not in all the cases, just some I've heard on the radio), and I probably just prefer singing over spoken word songs.
