Assuming somebody else does not throw you out another window first you would be sent to a rehabilitation camp and then made fun of Stealing a vessel owned by the Kingdom of Wexas has the death penalty. The other thing isn't really a crime, however.

Robbing a bank to pay for a kidnapping ransom?

Depends. If the bank was engaged in usury then a medal and a dinner with the Caliph.

If the bank was a respectable establishment, two to four years imprisonment or three to five years exile.

Probably death though (If it was anti-death penalty protest maybe the family wouldn't push for that and if you had both forgiveness from the family and prior service to the country then you'd get about 15 years on a prison ship).

Assuming an individual shoots and kills another, it is considered a capital crime, and the offender may be sentenced to life in prison or put on death row.
Assuming that the shooting didn't end in the victim dying, it is considered attempted murder and if the offender isn't wealthy enough to pay reparations + fine, long term imprisonment is likely.

Crime: Failure to acquire proper ticket(s) before using public transportation.

Vandalism. If they're in possession of enough money to rebuild the devastation or otherwise compensate the owners of the bookstore or apartment, that'll be taken from them, otherwise a fine. In both cases it accompanies a few months in a penitentiary.

The latter is not a crime on a federal level and the former is similarly not a crime anywhere in these United States... so not a crime.

Driving in the wrong lane in a highway where there is an unrelated traffic jam.

Not illegal if you have equipment, are not suicidal, and are jumping off a designated area. If you jump off illegally (considering if you are the opposite of all 3), you will first be brought to a hospital to treat injuries, then to a rehab camp.
