It's progressive power metal.

Lustmord - Godeater

Metallum says Lost Horizon is power metal.

I'm going through this song once more... and then I'll try... if I can tear myself away from electro-industrial/trance/synthpop/EBM hybrids. No, that will require one more and then I will try Lost Horizon. Ginger Snap5 is quite good.

Damnit, I was going to go to bed early but Terraria, with my family, just sucked 5 hours of my life away. I wasn't even going to play at first.

Today is break day from music listening, clearly...Finished Why? and that was it.

I only have about 3 hours of The Mars Volta to go through (depending what else I end up ditching, since, you know, my opinion on the vocalist half the time). Though a lot of songs are LONG.

Pretty bizarre progressive rock/experimental rock

Geez, this album is an hour and 16 minutes long, though.

The Mars Volta singer is one of those strange ones for me. He like, sings in a way that usually would bother me, but for some reason I'm becoming able to tolerate it better than I would normally. I think that's because there's something weird and unique about it, despite the style of a singing...A better The White Stripes singing type of style, maybe?

His singing in At the Drive In though...still don't think I can get into.

So far the most enjoyable singing of his I've heard is probably in Anywhere.
