The perpetrator receives the same punishment that the corrupt politician gets when convicted. Failure is not an option.

Depends, if there is more than 10 EV's then it's a terrorist crime and can be punished with death, if it is less however it is just property damage and will result in a large fine (amount depends on damages) and about 1 year in prison

Oh, you better believe you gotta pay double that in fines. And, of course, you get to be audited for at least three years to make sure you don't get any ideas.
