About how Japanese people say "blue traffic light" even though it is green.

Oh this is fun. So this is an instance of Japanese, like many languages around the world, lacking a lexical distinction between the colors blue and green, instead being referred to by the same word, in this case, the word 青 ao, which is still used for some vegetation, produce, and, indeed, traffic lights! Of course, in other instances, Japanese has another word, 緑, which is more recent, to refer specifically to shades of green.

They are, and it's Tuesday where I am. But I just had breakfast and I can't get a taco right now, so that's not as appetizing.

Who knows, there may be some prolific potato authors who've written real masterpieces out there so I'm gonna interpret this as a compliment! Well done!
