I don't really use WIP in my factbooks anymore, because in my opinion, factbooks can always get bigger.

I am able to distract people from the fact that my established worldbuilding has more or less been in a skeletal state for the past year and a half by continuously making the skeleton bigger.

Is it possible to learn this power? Also I'm fairly certain that I do the same; I'm really glad that no one's asked me much about the Ghesite's cultural practices because I've yet to come up with 90% of them.

Culture is the hardest part of worldbuilding, so that's understandable.

To bring up a different trope, you guys know how sometimes you'll get a far-PT or an FFT nation that has a leader taking stances on modern issues? It seems rather weird to me, and kind of shallow- I can get much more into something when the issues that leaders end up dealing with in lore are unique to the nation and not just "the people want welfare and healthcare which is literally gobm" or "our leader says trans rights when we've had the technology to literally render it a non-issue for several thousand years".

hmm.. I don't know, perhaps but a lot of the sections in the Culture of Feyrissshire Factbook that should have been there are already complete lore-wise.

Architecture is already complete but not there. Cuisine and Fashion. Festivals & Celebrations. And the most important for me simply because most people seems curious about it in Feyrissshire is Sex, Gender and Sexuality but is also not there but complete lore-wise

The "Visual Arts" also is missing Cross-stitching, Starrism and the Three Schools of Feyris Visual Art meaning that the lore and worldbuilding is complete, but I can't just be bothered to write and format it in another neatly-looking Wikipedia format

It's gonna be a pain writing about de-centralized and mostly primitive Tohorin with my pre-established lore about Sex, Gender and Sexuality, I've never tried the free love route...considering pre-Spanish Las Palmeras was pre-modern Shōwa-lite. I should also revamp old and inaccurate culture pages too.

Do you get extra points if said country also has a military that looks like that of a historic European army, but with more modern weaponry?

Yes and it's honestly silly. Even WWII era uniforms were generally less practical than modern ones. Imagine having to wear a Wehrmacht wool tunic under modern body armour, you would boil in your own sweat.

Vaaaal, no. I don't wanna see a Stahlhelm worn by a Soviet soldier with Roman Armor, that's just pain.

It's not so much "cliche" as "it's popular," but I'm seeing a lot of Japanese-themed or adjacent nations lately. Of course, plenty have been around while, like Hatsunia and Sanghyeok. But from what I can tell, since October there's been Russian-American (who I'm counting here because of Yamami-Romanova's central place as the PPA Chair), then Quartia and Karafuto (has Karafuto) popped up, and then I became active, and then we saw Kireina, the Otomo Shogunate, and the Neo-Wokoku Raiders, and maybe also some others I've missed. Like I said, I don't know if cliche is the right word, so much as "lots of people are interested in Japan," since each is a really different take on the theme, but it's still something I noticed.

I guess this is getting off-topic (as off-topic as a thread like this can get) but my personal fave thing is how anime fans react to literally any change done to anime when it gets localised in the West.

Meanwhile, as a Transformers fan, I look at how Japan treats their dubs of Western Transformers cartoons and laugh because modern anime dubs gets off easily compared to that shit.

Sounds like it's in a similar vein to the Ghost Stories English dub, what a wild ride that was.

That feeling of smugness when some of my favorite anime are so Americanized that they take place in Chicago and totally-not-NYC so IDGAF about it's supposed Japanese-ness.

Back on topic:

Speaking of the United States, it's quite hard to find a middle ground between dystopic alternate dictatorship versions of the USA or utopic progressive love-fest versions...not that I can blame people, the very mundane option would be boring.

Almost did something similar in Tohorin Social Republic's Canon, but it was with Robert Taft and William Knowland doing stupid Containment and pushing Israel into the USSR's arms, resulting in COINTELPRO and McCarthy ripping the Civil Rights Movement and "unloyal" Jewish and minority lobbies a new one in the 50s...leading to huge race riots in the 70s.

Oh and Left-leaning Evangelists and pro-Alternate Energy Nixon and GOP as they fear Pinko Israel and Iran's ability to destroy Middle Eastern oil.

It's my most blursed timeline for sure.
