I would say they're honestly quite averagely known. Not a complete nobody, but they don't have the whole Forum 7 cheering their name and raising a glass when they enter.

Made quite a name for themselves very, very rapidly. A relatively unique concept, backed up by the amazing, colorful, and informative Factbooks.

Probably one of, if not the most recognizable, face on this site. Not only due to the almost ungodly amounts of positivity (which at this point? it's a good thing), but due to the almost utopian state of their lore as a whole. Yes, fire and irradiated brimstone the likes of Sodom and Gomorrah (no, I'm not calling Val's lore or individuals involved in it "degenerates" by that comparison) happened, but ultimately? If the result was a paradise one could only dream of, then the result far outweighed the cost. I find such a take on the "nuclear destruction" concept extremely unique and admirable.

Pretty well known.

Late medieval/early Renaissance feudal kingdom. Doesn't have any lore, although my alt does.

They started a few days before Am*rican Summer ended, so they're a newcomer. But I have good insight that they'll be well-known on F7 in the near future

Well known. Due to their flag change, their going to become unknown or less well known unless people pay attention to the name.

I will repeat their own answer to this nation themselves, as they're basically unknown (unless I've just missed something obvious). They were founded in 2016, yet haven't even cracked 100 posts overall, which would probably explain this pretty well.

For me I don't remember seeing or encountering AN, so subjectively for me not well-known. But I'd imagine that because they are TSP Ambassador to Lazarus and seems to be active in the WA - GA and SC they might be very well-known in the WA and GP, or regional governments i.e well-known actually outside of F7.
