If outside the embassy/consulate of their nation, the assailant is subject to twice the fine and rehabilitation time then if they assaulted a citizen of Tharsis, regardless of the amount of damages. Within the embassy/consulate, the assailant would be subject to the other nations' laws regarding the assault, excluding execution, torture, detention, or exile.

Murder of a representative of the Sultan means the death penalty. No exceptions and no mitigating nonsense. Killing other criminals will not even be persecuted after that fact has been established. That person will be shot right after the murder has been proven, immediately.

Minor breach of the law. A fine of 25 Songans will be applied, and further continuation of business without proper registration will lead to higher fines each week.

If the owner is unable to pay, he is obligated to do community service until all fines are acquitted.

Yeesh! Typical jail time for aggravated assault is 15-20 years. That number does not change if it's a government official, unless there is a reasonable assumption that it was a hate crime. In that case, I'd say 30-50 years
