That's what happened to me. You can see it didn't work out well at all.

I have a Grandma who tells me I should listen to "happy music", and I'm just like "Why?". Next time someone says that I'm going to say "I will if you listen to more dark music"

Oh, and a aunt who I should a mellow song and they were like "This song is so depressing!", and they generally act like any time some grim story is mentioned they must always get to being happy and jolly with something else. It just feels too, I dunno, like they don't really want to know the realities of things like the meat industry, the hells of various countries in the world, and so on.

Then there's various other entertaining family stories but they're not really important ☐

Neither is what I said, but yeah.

Thankfully my parents were never too bad with the whole overly sheltering thing. I watched Slumdog Millionaire when I was 14, played M games since like 15 or 16, and so on. And I consider just looking at a movie or game and going "It is rated R/M they aren't allowed to watch/play that until 17!" as being overly sheltering and you should look more into it then simply that. I could go on but this isn't really the thread for it.

My parents tried to shelter me to some degree. But they let me watch the History channel and its uncensored WWII footage...

Thanks parents. I probably wouldn't be into Warhammer, Lovecraft, and all dark and horror things were it not for them.

Why wasn't God watching?

Why wasn't God listening?

Why wasn't God there for Georgia Lee?~

I don't particularly know what made me like dark, twisted movies, music, shows, and so on, but I think it is the fact that my parents let me grow up with an open mind. So I got an open mind for creativity in everything, because my parents had that too and passed it onto me. I just tend to like dark stuff more than happy stuff, but I think so does my dad. But as long as it is different and unique or whatever, I can like anything and everything pretty much.

I should also point out that being overly strict as parents (Like not being able to watch Pokemon because it is Satanic) is as bad as sheltering your kids too much...

Sorry you had to go through that, Luveria.

In other words — and this is the rock solid principle on which the whole of the Corporation's Galaxy-wide success is founded — their fundamental design flaws are completely hidden by their superficial design flaws.
