Nope.

My Chemical Romance has always been one of those weird bands that annoy the crap out of me generally, but at the same time I give them credit for at least varying quite a lot because I don't think I've heard a single song of theirs that sounded the same as each other. It's like I can't completely diss them, but I don't like them, either.

Elbow - Grace Under Pressure

I did detest My Chemical Romance, but then I noticed I like some of their songs. This one is my favourite MCR song.

You....You don't like In The Woods... ?

I was never a huge fan of MCR either, but I like a few of their songs. Favorite is "Famous Last Words".

I used to like this song more then I do now, but it still is kind of a guilty pleasure in some ways .

But when I think about why I liked some of these songs back in the day, I have to go at myself. Oh, the silly young teenager years.

There was also this that I used to like, but now it annoys the crap out of me.

OH GOD I FORGOT IT WAS A DISNEY SONG

There were various songs I used to like and I have no idea why, but I consider myself to at least of had a mostly good upbringing with music...

Green Carnation - "Under Eternal Stars"

This is the exact same band as In The Woods... but under a different name. When they changed styles they decided to just create a new band. But the music of both bands is absolutely extraordinary.

You should admit MCR's the Black Parade beats both.

MCR beats both at being shallow rock music manufactured for angsty pre-teens perhaps. I can actually find enjoyment in that album because of its variety and catchiness, but it doesn't even come close to equaling the artistic brilliance of In The Woods and Green Carnation, bands that transcend genres with music that speaks directly to the soul. You should listen to each of those band's albums before judging. They experiment with many different styles throughout their discography.

However, I'll let you off the hook for that because you like Summoning. ☐

I think the only Weezer I was on the verge of liking was their cover of a Radiohead song, which confused me that I even liked it at all....I dunno, Weezer really annoys me most of the time.

Indeed, sometimes it does. Didn't I just admit that I like The Black Parade? However, while plenty of shallow music is enjoyable, I think there is something wrong with saying that shallow music is superior to..... music with some actual depth and artistic merit to it, music that actually has emotion and can move you on a much more profound level.

You like Of Monsters and Men? Not my favorite Icelandic band but they're quite enjoyable. And the most famous Icelandic band. Interesting folk pop music and I quite like the females vocals, especially in Love Love Love.

Of Monsters and Men-Dirty Paws

Dirty Paws and Love Love Love are two of my favorite songs by them.

Honestly, despite the fact I wouldn't rate these guys anywhere near a favorite band of mine, I kind of want to physically own this album some day....It is good for when I need something easy to listen to.

I didn't even fully like them at first when I heard them.

The forest that once was green was colored black by those killing machines~

I love that line for some reason.
