"Aaah, a zara. Haven't seen the lake ones in a while, his history is even similar to that one of the New Hyrule, now that is indeed a funny coincidence...

Well, if you wish to know what I, General Onox, have to say about him... I, General Onox, am sorely disappointed to see that the ruler of the Zoras during your time was such a wimp. I, General Onox, had a blast fighting your people when I, General Onox, still roamed the lands of new Hyrule on my, General Onox's, route to my, General Onox's, current location and your ruler impressed me, General Onox. But you? You are a small kid whose head my, General Onox's, bare hands could crush with little effort. Instead of worrying about getting invaded, the Onox Legion would invade first or, in case we are truly outmatched, go on a destabilisation campaign beforehand.

Just send a few assassins that can't be traced back to you or have one of your champions slay them in a duel. Your species has the advantage of being able to control the area of the waters for crying out loud, there is no reason you couldn't signal that if they wish to dominate you, they will have to pay the prize for it. But what do I, General Onox, tell that to a wimpy child that isn't even in control of his own lands and mostly spends his time fishing? I, General Onox, look down upon you, as you are a shame to your descendants."

"hmm, short descriptions, might as well do all 3. Ok let's start with dear general Onox, his morality is... up for debate, call him a military dictator, thief, proclamation of unity, or revolutionary. Why is it up for debate? Because his goals are highly ambiguous? Is it power? money? the greater good? Who knows? intent is important when determining morality. What is certain that being able to unite those groups and fight for a common goal while leading the group to victory after victory, that's admirable and at the end of the day, he knows how to bond with other members.

Next is respected lieutenant Vire, his loyalty to dear leader combined with his form as a dragon makes me question if he is Onox's assistant deputy or mount. Could be one of them or could be both, either way his competent genius and loyalty to dear leader for the greater good of the organization is to be respected.

Last is Major General Riphon which has the bourgeoisie tendencies of being self-centered, she is competent judging from how quick she went up the ranks but I don't trust individualists like her in my socialist agenda. Hellion's Status: Empowering the People.

"While the biography may portray the Chairman in good light. He reminds me of the Imperials, who play to the audience in order to use as tools to topple their rivals by violent means. Instead of using more civilized method to gain power, and use it for the collective good. Not just self-enrichment through lying through their teeth. But I digress, I could be very wrong and by his "Maoism" whatever that is, could perhaps be a stronger alternative to this "Democratic Socialism" another ideology. I'm not remotely familiar with, however, I only hope it is for good of the people and not anything else."

- President Arthur Longstreet

"Apparently their nation has some kind of bizarre, untested form of government where people pick their leaders. How preposterous. That's never been done before. Let me see the file here, what else did my spies dig up on this eccentric..."

Okay, so he's a former military leader. Not bad, though he probably should have stuck with the military. And it looks like he's fairly hardline against the communists. Against slavery? Unusual, definitely unusual. Not unheard of though. I've met a few of these 'abolitionists' as they call themselves. Most have bounties on their heads, for "theft of property and sedition". And... anti-corruption, I see. I'm sure that problem can be fixed, one way or another.

See, here's what confuses me about this 'pick your own leaders' thing. Besides the fact that it's completely and wholly unprecedented, never been tried before... what's the point of such a system if the people just pick someone who is literally no different than a feudal warlord anyways?"

- Five Fingers Frederick

EDIT:

"My spies gave me a very detailed dossier on this individual. That is good, very good. Only one problem - it's complete gibberish. Now, I understand that I didn't go to one of those fancy colleges and the like, only rich people get to go to those. But even so, I read enough books in my time during my stint in prison. I've still never seen half the terms in this dossier. 'Dammo Arpiegee'? Is that supposed to be some kind of monster native to your corner of the world? 'Megacorpse'... is that just a really big cadaver? And it keeps going with these nonsensical terminology. 'Enpeysies'? That's... that's got to be some kind of fae creature, I'm sure. 'Heteromorph'? Eh... sounds like one of those words wizards use. I'm no wizard though. In any case, I can't make tails or snout of this dossier. It just keeps going like this. Is this why certain tomes are forbidden? They're maddening in just how nonsensical it all is?

Alright, there's a few useful bits of information to be gleaned from this damnable document, but this information is just as nonsensical as the rest. I do swear, whoever drafted this vile, bloody thing must have been very high. A waste of perfectly good parchment. So, they're agnostic? How daft. I would understand 'irreligious', but agnostic? The existence of gods is scientifically provable; the only question is as to which ones one feels like following. The rest of this only gets worse. We have another case of someone supporting a system of government that has quite literally never been conceived of or attempted before, a veritable porridge of meaningless terms like 'social credit', 'meritocracy', and 'internet', and oddly enough, this person supports unions. Interesting. In a lot of places, voicing support for unions is a good way to end up on the wrong side of a rifled musket.

I don't know what to think here. Honestly, I didn't understand most of that dossier, and I'm not entirely convinced that the document I just read isn't some wicked, accursed thing. I don't know who that is, I don't understand what it is, and I rather do not relish this."

- Five Fingers Frederick

OOC: Frederick would not recognize a lot of those terms, and for a lot of those things, there really isn't a good equivalent in our 'verse for him to even compare them to to attempt to understand it better. So... I went with this, which actually shows a bit of Five Fingers that's rarely seen. I tried to make it as clear as I could that I did read the factbook, and that it is simply that the character can't comprehend it, but I apologize if that didn't come through.

In any case, I hope this doesn't dishearten you. That was actually a pretty good read, and I think the first Isekai nation I've seen on NS. Very clever.

"Ah, you take my quote out of context, and fail to understand as a result. Very well. I am a local caputfamilia, see? I work for this business, the Airden Cartel. It's... an international business conglomerate. We'll go with that. I live in a colony of the Holy Empire. A good chunk of the cartel does business through the Holy Empire, though also with other places, outside the empire's reach. The Holy Empire doesn't really like us, at least officially. They call our business dirty words, like 'crime'. They need us though, they just aren't willing to admit it. But other than their markets, we don't really need them. We've been running things just fine without their laws, without their lawmen. We are better able to exert control than they are, in many places. In this backwater I live in, the word of the cartel means more than their word does. And in a way, that makes us a more legitimate 'state' than they are. That's what the quote meant. It is questioning the need for the state under which I operate, a state that, I would like to add, placed me in prison for 20 years. No, the cartel is more legitimate than the government, and we could likely become our own country if we wanted. We won't however, because it would undermine the marketplace."

"Emperor Nicholas is a monstrous entity, his power is greater than my own, and his will most likely surpasses that of my adversary, Emperor Ferrios. I'm very much envious of that power as there was no feature in Dawn of Champions. That allowed players to reach such levels, which is a shame. Wielding such power would perhaps make my dreams for the Ayworld, when I was summoned here easier. Nevertheless, Nicholas is likely to be the only tyrant that I'll have respect as his dictatorship has so far been serving the people, and not the people serving him. Although, I would prefer if he made some democratic reforms to his government. However, that's if his world allows for the possibility."

Carl's Mood: Curious

"I'll admit, when I saw this guy, I had some worrying preconceived sentiments about who I'd be dealing with. Let's face it, and I mean this in as nice of a way as possible, this man looks terrifying, and I was fully prepared to weave a colorful tapestry of reproachful tongue-lashings as I normally do with all the shamelessly flamboyant tyrants, but this guy is different. He's, I don't know, remarkably personable? Not that childhood disadvantage is unique to good people or anything, but Hellion got dealt an unbelievably sh*tty hand as a kid, and I can relate to the hardships associated with an absent mother. I guess what I'm trying to say is that looks can be deceiving, and Hellion represents one of those rare instances of genuine benevolence and good will. That's right, Hellion. The man who liberated the the Ayworld and singlehandedly built a better future for everyone but himself, a future based on meritocratic cooperation and good works."

"Being a loyal constituent of impartial democracy, I am naturally impressed with his dedication to democratic values. Being able to unite a collective group of people for a good cause is never an easy task, and most people will fail in that goal, but it's obvious that Hellion has the gumption and intelligence to make it happen. Economically, he's fairly socially oriented, which isn't necessarily a bad thing given his staunch morality and dedication to modified market capitalism, but that U-Word makes me nervous, and it's best I don't get into that. The people of Hellgustine could do far worse, and I can't say much other than I support this strangely cloaked man, and I hope we have the chance to interact further."

Carl Kirman. Many regard him as a legend, a myth, a hero, but what is he really? The Question: Is he absolutely one?

A shining example of a capitalist hero and gentleman. A manager of a Wondermat Store. Carl is a figure young ladies get told about while they grow up as a shining example of a capitalist hero. I have not a bad thing to say about him, but a massive amount of respect for him as he exemplifies the wonders of profit himself. I wish him and his success in the future and hope he will help Wondermat become even greater.

Thanks for your service, Carl Kirman!

Hellion's Status: Empowering the People.

"While there is nothing wrong with devoting oneself to a higher calling. There is something indeed wrong, when your High Priest is incapable in saying in a manner that is comprehensible one's ear to hear the message they seek to preach to their followers, and the world at large. I highly recommend taking voice therapy or if this exists in your world replace your voice box with a cybernetic one. If it cannot be fixed by the latter. Otherwise, overall, the High Priest leaves little to give judgement to his rulership. Outside of them being an oddity."

"A democratic Emperor? I suppose I shouldn't be surprised a conservative would be unable to see the contradictions surrounding that. I, like any other member of the PVS-NF, am opposed to careerism and view the whole concept of 'right' and 'wrong' people for politics as inherently elitist. However, I am willing to rescind that viewpoint just this once - in regards to this one man. How can a man like himself, who has supposedly been pulled into a video game - though one more far more advanced than we have in my time - who seems to have no understanding of the intricacies of politics and government, be trusted with the power he is being? Perhaps it is only due to his apparent strength - there is no chance someone who claims to be a supporter of democracy and simultaneously declares themselves 'Grand Imperator' is sane or trustworthy." - President of the Confederation Siegfried de Vries

"This guy is a socialist and supports homo marriages, which makes him blursed. Ah, and he moves away the Catholic Church from his government. Cool. In our glorious Lechia, the Church that started our 1060-year slavery is slowly disappearing. Anyway, keep fighting against the imperialists!"

"This Borzywoj would support any asshole out there if he is so called "Anti-imperialist", he would kill innocents for shit and giggles, but if two consenting adults enjoy themselves in ya' know what way, he is gonna be like "They are immoral! Oh, they gonna ruin my precious society and long existing traditions!" Maybe I just should stop caring at this point? After all, his country gonna fall apart when some male dude finds a significant other who is also male. Cause it's so moralistic...

And his moustaches look stupid... Like some overgrown 14 years old dude. What? I can make the fun of him all I want, cause he is a nationalist asshole! Maybe I should become a patron for some Charlie Chaplin follower, who makes a parody film about him? Or perhaps, I should show him, what we have changed in North Korea when we conquered it? For example, did he know, that one of the ministries looks better as a casino? Cause we renovated it a lil' bit.

Either way, slavs and other folks in Lechia are better off without this wannabe chad edgelord, who got more power than he should." -Overboss Shawn Bjornson

"I'll read the dossier again, and try to get more intel. Perhaps I should join the Shawn and the council in their little competition of "Who can insult First Dobrosławski better". I'll try some ideas later. After all, I might come up with something less stale and more witty. Perhaps, some of his positive aspects can be insulted?" -Spymaster Blackbird.

"According to him, we are primitive idiots cause we love freedom... So how do we get tech? Yes, we steal it from tyrants like him! After all, what can be better than to find some oppressor, slay him and loot his coffers? Only to tie him up and force to watch how we liberate the people and redistribute the looted goods to them and our warriors. Either way Enzo represents one of the things we fight against and why it's necessary for us to be the bulwark of freedom in this world and keep our guns handy." -Overboss Shawn Bjornson

Anšar looks at the tablet in front of him and rolls his eyes "Five lines on his abilities and only two on his personality. I don't care what powers you allegedly have, you one-eyed freak, well lets see, ah, the two lines are really just an extended version of three words: Powerful and Evil. Fucking yawn. Oh, theres a political thingy he filled out? Let's see... Yep, evil."

"Oh, this savage again. He's just like the other rabid-conquerors but with a different coat of paint and set of lies to justify himself. If you were a good hedonist, you'd stay where you are and party yourself to death but instead you decide to fuck around all over your planet and attack other nations because freedom. You are a conquerer, and that's okay so long as you keep your distance, barbarian. Just quit acting like you're some hero to your species and prophet of freedom or whatever when it's clear you're an ambitious man and a smasher of nations... And how do you even keep all that land anyway? What kind of logic-defying anarchy are you running? I get that I'm coming off as a dick right now, but I'm really not that bothered by you, not my planet, not my problem. So, have fun, I guess, Stan, Overboss of the Reavers of the Sky."

"While, uh, R-iobh-ca? Is that how you say it? Riobhca! Yes. Where was I? Oh yes, while Riobhca does indeed appear to be a person with a moral spine as she seems to have worked in the line of helping the unfortunate get back or even have the chance to get on their feet for the matter. There is really nothing else to say about her. Her rise to power and that time in power is a total blank there. That is left as a blank, and I wonder if that was intentional, which gets me concerned. That she was only pretending to serve the people but only to betray them once she reached the top of the political ladder. I hope that isn't the case, and hope it's just unintentional, and the writer of her profile just hasn't gotten to those bits yet. Overall, I'm cautiously neutral."

"Ethical science? What even is that? Ehh, anyway... so we've got this cat who goes by the name 'Hellion', looks like a zoot-suit-sportin' terminator (which isn't an entirely terrible choice of aesthetic if you ask me), and sports the title of 'Imperator of the Hellgustine Federation'.

"I admit, I was ready to see an edgefest of epic proportions, but you done pulled a fast one on me! A pleasant surprise, indeed!
