nations without passion, that are just a vehicle for the author's political worldview. don't get me wrong, that's kind of this nation for me (which is why i got so disillusioned by people constantly bringing up slavery that i decided to let it go), but there are so many nations where it's obvious there's no love or care put into them, it's just there to play to the author's utopia, but once they get the dopamine hit it's back into the play chest until tomorrow. these nations are usually leftist, usually have only a few factbooks if that, and are all in the wa. their users tend to stay in nsg, and they just generally don't seem to be enjoying themselves all that much. as politics tends to do to people.

My nation is kinda based off my own views, but that doesn't mean I don't like fun. Sometimes, I spice my nation up with some good old political drama, like when our governing AI attempted a coup. I personally don't mind if a nation is based of the user's belief, as long as it is interesting.

disclaimers in their sig or in dispatches saying "this nation doesn't represent my beliefs", especially when the nation in question is blatantly supposed to be "evil" or "dystopian". "Oppressionistan is a tyrannical dictatorship that tortures dissidents to death and enslaves all its citizens, by the way it doesn't represent my real views". No, really??? I know it's not that big of a deal, but honestly every time I see one it's like the entire nation and everything that's been written for it gets coated in a layer of preachy wannabe social commentary and "this is supposed to be bad! look how bad it is!", and even if it isn't a one-dimensional dystopia on its own, the fact that there's a disclaimer up saying "this is what the author doesn't like" makes it all feel ever-so-slightly more like one. I've never found myself reading about a nation that goes against contemporary morality in some way and thinking "gee, I sure wish the author would directly tell me what they think of all this", it just makes it less interesting.

I still stand by my belief that Talatorrum is, at most, a vaguely edgy right-winger with an intense dedication for "triggering the libs". I might even go so far as to say they probably took advantage of the fact that people are used to seeing the authors of morally "bad" nations loudly proclaim their disagreements with their IC content, by subverting everyone's expectations to make their own persona stand out more.

It makes a lot more sense, for sure.

Though it felt like they were actually seriously irritated by people challenging their edginess in a General thread right before they got banned, so I've got some doubt in that regard.

Is it me, or i feel like people generally expect a left wing country's socialism to be visibly "justified" in its imagery, fact book info or leader info. at the end of the day, socialism is an economic ideology the same way that neo-liberal capitalism is, it doesn't always have to be a primary focus of the culture.

As a socialist country which doesn't hold a fetish for red or slap People's Democracy on everything, I sort of understand why. Most of the Left nations here are radical socialists, revolutionaries, and socialism seeks to change the totality of society - which justifies it being ontologically everywhere.

Cough* [Kotera's opinion on totalitarianism] *Cough

The same thing with neoliberalism, really, and any economic system - it's difficult to point to anything in Western culture that hasn't been commercialised, commodified, and colonised by the system. That's just how socioeconomics works, frankly.

It's also the NS Left's Wehraboo phenomenon. It's just fun to RP as a USSR-like state, where idealism can be implemented without everyone screaming "ASB!"

yeah, but its also good to create alternate scenarios, where socialism is maybe a default in society, or maybe a medieval socialist nation of sorts. You also don't really see socialist nations that take place in the distant past. which is a shame. at earliest, it's mid-20th century.

Eh, people putting 'This nation doesn't represent my own views' in their signature has been a thing for years, long before Talatorrum came around.

I still remember the days when it seemed there were like 500 different Nazi Germany nations and basically all of them had some variant of that disclaimer in their sigs because, unfortunately, NationStates has actual Neo-Nazis using it (and this was back in the day when Stormfront would periodically raid the site to try and 'convert' people/trigger the libs/be jackasses).

Not this account, but I feel like my main nation (Gandoor) is hilariously the opposite of this.

Yeah the flag is red and has yellow stars, the national motto is Liberty, Democracy, Socialism, the current governing party is the Communist Party (which IC-wise is only a democratic socialist one, not full-on communist), and I've made references that the official ideology of Gandoor is democratic market socialism and that the preamble to the constitution calls for the establishment of a 'Socialist economic system'.

All of which would scream 'THIS NATION IS SOCIALIST!!! IT IS SO VERY SOCIALIST' and yet I am also very clear that Gandoor itself isn't actually a socialist nation, it's a social democracy that, depending on the party in power, may or may not want to eventually transition to socialism. (I justify all the references to socialism by pointing out that there are several non-socialist countries IRL, like Portugal and India, that have constitutional references to establishing socialism/being socialist while not actually being socialist in the present day)
