Apparently, their version of Sargon, after not being demonetized for whatever reason, decided to start a race war because people with bunny ears don't like it when there's nudity in TV shows and it's "degeneracy" and "the fall of Human civilization" when people decide five seconds of skin in their media isn't worth outraging an entire cultural group. Fortunately, his nascent hate-group fails almost immediately after it meets a high-speed garbage truck, the only casualty of their new order being a poor old janitor who decided the sniveling manchild wasn't actually that much of a threat and told him to go home. Unfortunately, that janitor found out the hard way that if someone gets angry enough to go out and murder people for having different ears than they do, they'll probably also be angry enough to shoot you for uttering the word "no" in their general direction.

It's explicitly meant to twist what the user views as points 4 and 5 of the NS meta on their heads- namely, outlandish ideologies and Evil Nations™. I think it's done an excellent job of that.

They also fail at everything they attempt to succeed at and succeed at everything they attempt to fail at. 25K words? No one bothers to read it. A stupid Clue remake? 52 upvotes totaled. Just goes to show their notion of the NS meta is unfortunately quite accurate.

The Caleshan have largely automated their, uh, succession process for the position of Cala, as their social credit system determines when the old Cala needs to have swift and prompt lessons in unsupported flight, rather than public opinion, as it used to. Well, I suppose that's one way to avoid mob rule.

The final stage requires a confirmatory in-person vote, just to ensure that the process wasn't hacked. In practice though, the process is actually quite lenient and takes into account any health issues. They aren't liable to get flung out a window just for getting sick or taking a day or two off.

In a rather amusing departure from his most well-known appearance on this site, Oskar Dirlwanger was tortured (and presumably killed) by GSG-9, the Reich's secret police/Nazi-hunters, for holding sympathies with the fascists and attempting to form a fascist organization. I guess he won't be abducting Patagonian children today.

Livi Husk, stand-in for a certain tech-CEO with a geeky Enlightened-Centrist fanbase, was elected leader of their nation in the past and it led to disasters results, most notably the privatization of key public services like healthcare that led to inaccessibility for many and also the exploitation of faunus labor.

Moreau is de-facto one of the most influential members of the Remnant thanks to his creations' immense love for him, a love so intense that when the Japanese general staff threatened him, they literally executed the general staff. Makes sense, I wouldn't want to mess with a dude with thousands of soldiers willing to literally impale themselves on spears in order to kill the one who threatened their maker either.

The Scions of Ghes face an uncertain future as a newly-unified band of tribes find themselves on a diplomatic tightrope against larger powers; any attempt to disrupt this status quo, either through subjugation (by allowing themselves to be dependents on larger powers) or conquest must be considered very carefully.

The country's economy was liberalised considerably between 2046 and 2071, as the governmental control over key industries was lessened and Capital-driven banks became more prominent in the running of the general economy. This, however, was not universal across the country, and the government continued to plan and administrate the economies of a few regions.

By helping Rothari, a claimant to the throne of Lombardy, Junius could succeed in making Lombardy a tributary state and taking back parts of Lombardy, which meant -from a certain point of view- bringing back Northern Italy into the fold.
