Depends. Purposely falsifying the date of the document that's not for commercial gain or used in court will be given a fine of 150 BKL ( 115 USD ) to the people involved in it. If the documents are used for financial gain and/or used in court, the people involved will be sent to prison for a minimum of 2 months or more but not more than 10 years.

Just getting somebody's IP adress is not neccesarly a crime, hell, you could have gotten it accidentally, but if you sell it, make it public, or otherwise use that information to comit a crime, on top of the penalty for the crime/s you committed the fact you hacked into somebody's IP adress will make the sentence even worse.

Destroying somebody else's property.

Accidentally? Probably ends up in little claims court, have to pay the damages over.

Intentionally? Depends on what you destroy and how you do it. Probably anywhere between 6 months and 10 years.

A baton to the knee from a very bored Civil Security patrol.

Secretly constructing a railroad through YN's largest nature reserve so as to shave off hundreds of thousands of dollars in shipping rather than detouring around like other railroads.
