I mean, we can actually create a mathematical definition for evolution in terms of the evolutionary algorithm and then write code to deal with abstract instances of evolution, which basically equates to mathematical proof that evolution works. All that remains is to show that biological systems replicate in such a way as to satisfy the minimal criteria required for evolution to apply to them, something which has already been adequately shown time and again. At this point, we've pretty much proven that not only can evolution happen, it pretty much must happen since it's basically impossible to prevent it from happening.

I don't mind some songs by that band. But you're mistaken about symphonic black metal being in the symphonic genre, which you seem to have been implying. Symphonic black metal is part of the black metal genre. It's black metal that happens to be symphonic, so it's not really 'symphonic symphonic.'

I know symphonic black metal is sub genre to black metal, not symphonic metal. It's just that my least favorite black metal songs/bands happen to fall into that category.

I really haven't done a lot of actual new music posting recently, based off what my Last.FM statistics show.....I've done a lot of just listening to bands but that's about it and I haven't even done a ton of that.

Mumford & Sons-Babel

Decided it was time to give this a more thorough listen. I already know from what I've heard I didn't like it as much as the first album. Even the band admitted they played it safe with this album because they knew it was the easy route to go. Understandable to me, honestly. People don't like change.

They said they are going to be more experimental with the next album, though.
