They didn't.

Time for the I am just testing 3 hype party.

Lescaaris, a progressive democratic-diarchic merchant republic in the near-future "post-post-apocalyptic" America, where society is rebuilt and new nation-states have been created while the United States government is nowhere to be found (I doubt the setting is really important and relevant though). Famous for European architecture, EDM, nightclubs, civil liberties, job opportunities, and trade fairs.

(To get a general theme-idea, Lescaarch culture is a combination of Dutch, Italian, Belgian, Monégasque, and French cultures.)

Cliche: any nuclear weapon use in an II war either results in both sides being horrified by what they've done and signing a white peace (or massive protests resulting in the said peace), or a non-limited exchange which ALWAYS ends up destroying all of the civilization.

Like there is completely no way for states to continue fighting a conventional war, using nukes from time to time or for at least some remains of the government to survive after a non-limited exchange even in a PMT situation

A non-limited exchange against major population centers won't just kill people, they'll mess up communications centers and rail/road junctions, while probably also wrecking any nation's industrial capacity. Any faction that doesn't target those and suspected warehouses would be unrealistically idiotic. There is no way to continue a "conventional war" under such premises, even if we're being generous and we're assuming that your ground forces were totally and completely unscathed.

Political willpower is worthless when your conventional armies will have no sensible way of maintaining their supply lines to even function normally.

I mean there is no way for states to continue it because any intelligent state actor uses tactical strikes to cut off enemy communications, supplies and infrastructure, to speak nothing of the actual manpower (and civilian population). The entire point of a nuclear strike is to make the other guy stop fighting. The only way you might get any resistance is if the guy getting nuked had an absurdly rabid armed force that doesn't know what morale is and how it can drop, otherwise you're limited to small, scarce resistance militias.

In all seriousness, part of the reason I don't really participate in the Opinion on AL thread that much is because it does get pretty demotivating to make 300+ word posts, only to get a complete and utter summerpost (even worse if they've not read past the sidebar). Doesn't really help that, since I take a fuckton of time to write my posts, by the time I'll almost done with the post, I'll likely have been ninj'd, meaning I have to do another entire post, on top of the one I was already writing. Repeat that for quite a few times, and you can probably see why I've kinda been having a hiatus on that thread. I should probably come back at some point, though. Maybe even cover LP in the process?

That's why I always wait for the thread to cool down a bit before replying. Even better if it risks being wiped out by the weekly purge. Or does it increase the chance of being ninja'd?
