"He is a fellow, not a fellow friend, or fellow business partner. Although the latter is close yet Navarro hasn't come that close to being considered an equal, who would ever willingly be my equal? None that couldn't stomach, the need to do what must be done, for that regard. Nevertheless, Navarro has his uses as a resource outlet for my beloved estate. His land is strange yet plentiful, though stained with the tragedy of a failed despot, that waged a pointless war against enlightenment and paid for that foolish zealotry in blood, and from it, emerged the Overseer's Council, and the Sky Reavers, a ravenous people with purpose and ambitions that board on the fantastical heroics, no matter, how naive. Yet, an enriched and growing people, and one that isn't to be undermined. As the fate of those who do get the cruellest ends. "

Waldemar Rochester

"I really do have a lot of respect for John Mercer and the policies he has enacted during his now 53 years in power (which I have to admit is very impressive). Firstly, as a former Army General, I am glad he has served in the Army as a High Marshall, and his role in the Civil War to take down Mr. Andrew Ryan is also something that I admire. His leadership is even better, and I support many of the decisions he had enacted and positions he holds. These include national unity, defense, and leadership (all of which I highly prioritize), Reconstruction and Industrialization after the civil war, and his regulation of the sciences. I support many of the things he's for, such as military advancement, state surveillance, and Rhine Capitalism. Also, the various combat techniques he possesses, like Gun Fu, Weaver stance, shotgun punch, and pursuit are all incredibly unique. Overall, I just love John Mercer as a leader, and I think he has lead his nation to glory and greatness after the civil war. And for all of that, I commend him as a leader."

It seems we have a socialist ruling over a city state. Who served in the army, almost died many times, then got into politics afterwards so others could hear his side of the story. I'm not going to say I've lived a life like that but there are similarities to his story and mine. With the only difference being our ideologies. He doesn't seem to be a dislikable person, unlike basically half of the other options I was given to choose from. Although his story and how he seems to think is similar to alot of other socialists, Him ruling a city-state may put him above the pack. Though not by much its enough for me to actually feel like reading. All in all I would give him a 6/10 -Nerias Gregory

I've sent every goddamn agent we have to collect information on... John Robertson? Robert Johnson? And came out with nothing. Regardless, I will improvise something.

He has no discernable views beyond "progress", "development", and other such ideals that are ultimately meaningless buzzwords to spew out. The problem with these ideologies are embraced by Huffmania, which is that it exists in a nebulous, vague oligarchy, while the common man is trampled on. I am quite certain that the only thing that defines Huffmania is evil, for there is no real end goal beyond to harm and damage, otherwise they would have found more efficient ways of progress. In other words, you are a revolting, cruel man, Bob.

Ishmael, Grade 6 Fixer

” Sometimes I find it so difficult to imagine a government with any transparency; the Head is a complete mystery, it might be run by a single individual or a conglomerate of corrupt businessmen. The reality is whatever you believe in. There's no ambiguity when it comes to Mr Rochester, he's a public figure, almost like a celebrity ... which comes natural to running a country. Whether one is in the City or within Imagination Animals, people care about who is leading them. Say what you will about his reforms in certain areas ... wouldn't you rather focus on the easy problems? Backstreets or the Nest, it doesn't matter where you are, businesses in the City use half-measures all the time to prove a point. So that they can point to a list of achievements to save face by telling you they are doing something. This man's head is far in the clouds if I can envision him as the CEO of one of the Wings. Very much disconnected from the sufferings of the every man.”
