Solarianism is their timeline's version of Christianity, but it has an entire pantheon of Sun-Based gods that all seem to favor setting people on fire.

And yet Judaism is nonexistent and somehow Islam remains a thing. Strange.

Judaism isn't non-existent though? It basically has a similar status to what it did OTL, except the Persians give them more right in Persian Mesopotamia than the Muslims did OTL. And uh. Islam "remains a thing" only in like 3-4 cities around Medina. /skip

But it's apparently unaltered from this timeline, which is strange given the other faiths.

The paranormal is very real. Some people can practice magic as a kind of innate power. They might be born with it like a "mutation" or gain it in a moment of intense trauma or transition. Kinda makes me think of how comic book superheroes often get powers. Other people can practice magic by making contracts with otherworldly powers. It's physically dangerous, but it seems to be the main way to gain magic powers intentionally. But there are a few alternatives to contracts that still let someone become magically intentionally.

They are collectivist to a cartoonish extent. Everyone has a number instead of a name, is forced to wear a mask, and are exclusively referred to as 'it'.

For a goodly long while, they were ruled by a Norwegian/Swedish fascist regime that had fled Russian conquest. Naturally, the fascists immediately sought friends and allies amongst the indigenous folk in the area and brought forth an age of peace and understanding... pffft okay that was a lie they totally oppressed the shit out of everybody that wasn't them right up until said folks liberated the ruling family's brains all over the floor.

The Waisnorian president is directly and universally elected by secret ballot into three-year terms, and may serve at most 3 terms (i.e. 9 years) at most. However, they may be removed by a supermajority vote in the Parliament.

AN: Zuamaland is a large landlocked country in southern Africa, and was a former Swedish-Norwegian colony. It is named after the Zambezi River, and has seven states albeit with a heavy direct democracy element under market socialism.

Nacrad has two classes of Aircraft Carriers: Perseverance and Endurance. Both classes are named after the "father" ship of their class (NNV Perseverance and NNV Endurance), both being two of the three words of the Nacradian Navy Fleet's Motto (Perseverance, Endurance, Resolution). Assuming they ever get around to go for a third class, it might be named Resolution, what I'm most curious about is how they might name the other ships of these current classes: Synonyms or similar words?

Despite its federal nature, Zuamaland's legislature is unicameral, which sounds a bit weird because bicameralism is essentially an aspect of federalism, meant to give states a say in legislature as much as the people. Moreso, its system seems like it is built to be inefficient and haphazard: Presidents serve for five-year terms but only once (Which means it's both too long and too short for anyone to create a long-term plan) while legislators serve on two-year terms but can renew their terms four time (which, again, means it's too short to do anything and they'll be trying to campaign pretty much the moment they take their seat). Then again... this might be by design, given their semi-direct democratic nature.
