Over here, public transport is simply not a thing, unless you like rundown, overcrowded minibuses while being stuck in gridlocked traffic.

I doubled down and made it so my citizens get neither public transportation or cars. They don't leave their villages on private errands much anyways.

Come out, the WA has passed a resolution. Actions will be taken to bring your nation into compliance.

I'll disagree. While the general ideas normally involved with FT often lead to the ripping of ideas frompop culture, its easy to put your own spin on it, and even then, you can still make new, fascinating stuff. Plus, it gives you a chance to run any nation style you want without constraint, even stuff that doesn't already exist. No need to examine history and geography and culture and religion, just do something!

I also don't see a lot of reason to stick to MT. Its the conservative way to RP, since it is in modern technology and times, and while that means it's safe, its been done far more across not just NS, but elsewhere. Sure, its easy too, but being able to wield technologies that some may have their heads spinning over is a lot more fun.

As for other tech levels, I think past tech is also an interesting idea... if its not within the last 122-ish years. Late 19th century is a bit iffy as well, but anything earlier than that and its cool. I'd actually like to see, maybe, some nations based on societies from BCE times.

Of course, I say this as an FT player myself, so obviously I'll side with what I have

TL;DR: I'd like to see more than MT, past or future.

Andronician Empire is meant to be from the Roman Republic. It actually came from another rp, which is part of the reason work on it has been so slow, as MELKOR deleted his server, so it has been hard to find all the records, and some stuff I just forgot.

It depends where you interests lie. I have pretty good knowledge of military tactics post WWI (and I don't have a PhD or security clearance) but try to get me to describe 18th century or earlier combat and I'd just say they stand in a line shooting at each other.

Of course, I say this as an FT player myself, so obviously I'll side with what I have.

TL;DR: I'd like to see more than MT, past or future.

Every FT nation I've seen so far with few exceptions are such:

"Giga huge galaxy spanning empire that is perfectly idealized, nothing wrong, zero conflict, everyone is happy in this utopian empire with zero struggles and nothing to drive a story, assuming there is one, because everything is fine! Also everything's stupidly OP and we have a military bigger than our total population but everything is fine "O"

While that is a common cliché, I wouldn't say I am someone who is part of it, hence my more positive opinion on it. Most of my RP is in my region, and that remains canon here in the forums, and if I was asked I could tell about many opposites that I complete to this cliché. Plus, I'm not the only one where I RP, so it actually opens up the way again, instead of locking people into the cliché you mentioned.

Cliche of people's nation having dogshit tier public transport and very cardependent infrastructure.

Mostly rural American south, but it has nothing except horses, bikes, and public transportation, and most people get places outside of their towns on trains. I believe that's called a sneaky, but while it made narrative sense and is one of the cornerstones for why the world is the way it is, it was definitely helped along by the fact that I used to listen to the Railway Series narrations by Willie Rushton as a kid and like trains as a result. Like, "would go and build one and operate it commercially if I had the money" kind of like.

I'd like more trains in New Zealand but we don't have the topography for a wide-spread passenger rail network, it's also sad seeing long-distance train services being cut off since people aren't leaving the cities as much

On the plus side, both Auckland and Wellington have pretty decent internal rail networks. Both my father and grandfather worked in the railways for a combined  $\sim\!80$  years I think, so I am definitely a fan of trains and rail transport.
