Because of the dreaded WW2 memers, Italy gets a very bad rep (much like France) and overlook some of the victories the Italians achieved before and during World War II.

I've actually never seen an American, British, Italian, or French WW2-Based nation

I am probably just not looking hard enough for the first one, but I wouldn't be surprised if they just - didn't exist. Which is a shame, because knowing the cursed shit NSers can come up with, I am imagining something amazing like Guerilla Churchill fighting Nazis single-handedly in the Scottish Highlands, A deconstruction of the 'American Invasion' narrative found in Man in the High Castle/similar stories, Post-WW2 Fascist Italy (kind of explored in Las Palmeras, but not the main focus so shhh), etc.

Churchill, 20 British soldiers, and a single horse VS the entire Nazi Regime. Germany will collapse in days.

I create puppet accounts, actually work on their lore for a few weeks, then stop giving a fuck beyond answering issues from an IC POV because I really don't have the patience to actually actively use more than two nations.

As an Italian I can only note that the few alternative Italies that exist are for the most part either absolute monarchies or a reference to the Italian Social Republic.
In addition, the names of these countries are always in Italian.

Foehn Paramilitary Regions

Over here, as a Spaniard, most of them tend to be Republican and Francowank, with one or two going out of that. And then you have the good shit AKA Estado Americano. Granted, this might be me being biased towards my friend, and it doesn't help that I'm the one who is (slowly) making the translations to Spanish.

Oh, I guess I have Nova Chanaan, but that's more of a C&C fanfic than anything. Although I think I can say it's no wank by any means.

Growing cliche: More and more signup threads now include something like "to prove you read the rules include this in your application" and I don't understand why. It's always the first or last thing in the rules list, so if I was just skimming I would still know about it. Half the time it's included in the blank app anyway so as long as I copy and paste it will be there.

This is a completely petty pet peeve, but does anyone really think making someone include some meme phrase at the end of their app will really sort out good or bad roleplayers?

Whenever I OP my first thread I'm replacing the meme phrase with "Who was the bassist in Procol Harum's original 1967 lineup?" on the basis that if you can't be assed to merely Google something you probably can't be assed to follow the rules.

or better off, you may try putting a question related to the theme of the thread so that users actually know their shit before posting anything of value

I like this. For example, if I were to make an app for a WWIII thread, I could end it with a simple question:

Do you understand why invading the US is tantamount to suicide in an MT, PMT (and past tech) setting, given various factors?

I suppose the reason why people actually do that in RP's is likely due to the influx of newer, very much less experienced users. From what I understand, it's supposed to weed out bad RP'ers, but I have a feeling it's efficacy is hogshit. The ability to lie about your "RP credentials" is one of those loopholes in that requirement.

In 1992, the User Control Panel took no stance on the ongoing Bosnian War, as it did not exist at the time. Both Bosnia and Herzegovina and Republika Srpska expressed disdain for this expression of neutrality, and clamored for support from the UCP, which merely continued a long period of silence from from the UCP on foreign affairs.

Tbf, I'm p sure we already have an effective "rp credentials" system put in place. Just ask them to link a rp thread they're in and observe..
